Aurora

I am sitting on the porch of a country house, on a quiet evening, in the middle of the forest and trying, with the help of a brush, to catch every bush-leaf and blade of grass—every detail. I listen to them and feel them, and then I stop. There is no longer one leaf, one blade. There is only the porch of the country house, and the quiet evening, in the middle of the forest, with all the warmth of this day's sun and all the warmth, from day to day, of the one who is with me.
