

For me as for painter colour plays one of the most meaningful and important role in a creating of a piece.

The theme I found myself interested in is dedicated to the equality of all human races in any manifestation of skin tones. I am attentive to the phenomenon in our world known as colour spectrum.) is dispersed and refracted by a prism (or by something that acts like a prism, for example a glass of water).

I despise any manifestation of human discrimination, I accept everyone as a whole. In this certain work I interpret human races as a spectrum. We are one of the whole as well as a great variation of colour tones that hide behind the white light.

The figure on the painting symbolizes purity – white light or the whole, while the surroundings are the unification and mixture of all colour tones she gives birth to.

Sometimes while painting I try not to physically mix colours together; I rely on the ability of the eye and mind of the viewer to blend the colour spots into a fuller range of tones. We already know this kind of technique known as "pointillism" but instead of rational and systematic ways of doing it I apply colours in more spontaneous and expressive way.
