What is this atmosphere between me and the other, that connects, or perhaps separates us? When does the surrounding Field become a mutual experience, or when does one overpower the other, taking the weaker one into their Field of Impact? You can't really tell... There's just this ethereal dream that encircles in the form of a person or a place, and then ever so subtly lets me go. This experience entails a heavy dose of a dreamy substance, that leaves me with but an obscure memory of that feathery state.

I work with apparent figures, but what's more important in the painting, is the background surrounding those shapes. The impact that comes from the outside, or maybe exudes from within, creating a unique landscape in the world.

Miina Peterson (born 1991) is an Estonian artist who lives and works in Tallinn. She studied painting at Estonian Academy of Arts where she received her bachelor's degree and spent an exchange semester at Berlin University of Arts. Currently she is doing master's degree in painting department in Estonian Academy of Arts. In her artwork she works on subjects that grow from the inside out through inner conflict or necessity – trying to cleanse herself through art. Constantly analyzing herself she feels out the boundaries between balance and chaos, resulting, that both states are needed for a prosperous life. Video, installation and performance are mediums besides painting that allow some narratives to stand out better.
